3. Click the Audio tab and turn on “Apply volume leveling” (Figure 5-13).

That’s it. The next time you sync with the iPod, your PC will transfer all of the newly modified songs to the player.

Note: You may spot an option on the iPod itself called SoundCheck, which also purports to adjust mismatched volume levels between songs. But that’s for use with iTunes only. MusicMatch for Windows doesn’t work the same way; it adjusts song volumes on the PC and then transfers the whole shebang over to the player.

Grab a magazine next time you sync—applying volume leveling to your tracks makes them take longer to download to the iPod from MusicMatch Jukebox.

MusicMatch Administration

At its heart, MusicMatch is nothing more than a glorified database. Its job is to search, sort, and display information, quickly and efficiently. Here, for example, are some powerful managerial tasks it stands ready to handle.

Searching for Songs

The Find feature can search out all the songs that have a specific word in their title, album name, or artist attribution. To make it work, click Find at the top of your library window.

In the Find in Music Library box, type the word or name you’re looking for, and then click Find First.

For example, in Figure 5-14, typing love jumps down the library list to tracks by different performers that all have the word “love” somewhere in the song’s information—maybe the title of the song, maybe the band name. Click Add to add the song to the playlist window, and then click Find Next to move on.
